Begin, We were infinity
Unbound to time and place
Our spirits intertwined

Vagabonds, Traveling between grace and mercy
Holding too tightly to one another
Suffocating, Losing our reasons to breathe at all

In death we were alive, In Hell we were aligned
We danced on the pavement of good intentions
Blindly creating dissension

Warriors, We stood toe to toe with faceless enemies
They took me first, tearing flesh from bone
You were next, clawing your heart from your chest

Broken, wings clipped, we crawled
No longer intertwined, now tangled
Searching, Our gazes no longer held to one another

Our grips loosen
He comes with scars in each hand, His left for you, His right for me
He holds, never pulls

His cupped hands cradle two broken souls
His fingers mend our torn bodies
Weaving his flesh into hers, His heart into mine

Complete, whole in body, he sets us on a course
Running, we race with time, no longer against
We race with hope, no longer without
The fight is finished, the race is good, the faith is found
